EXTERNAL PERSPECTIVE IN BUSINESS

This short report is all about external perspective in business and how changing your perspective can bring amazing success.

How many times in your life have you observed something and then made an observation only to have your conclusions changed as soon as you received some new or additional information?

There are often times that you can make an observation based on incomplete or wrong information. This can lead to the wrong conclusions.

An example of this would be how many people thought that the earth was flat until someone proved them wrong. The stars are another example. They may look small but we know that they are actually huge planets.

In this report I want you to challenge some of your old ideas, paradigms and perspectives in business. I am going to give you alternatives and I want you to consider whether they are better or just different.

There are five specific observations that I want to look at.

The first of these is the idea of standing out to get attention. There are so many competitors out there and if you want to do business you have to stand out. This is what most people assume.

What about crafting messages to cut through the clutter? There are so many marketing messages and so much going on that it is often necessary to craft messages that will get through the clutter. What about communicating? You have to make sure that you communicate properly if you want to get your messages to your marketplace.

The USP or unique selling proposition is another. What makes you different from your competitors?

Most business owners are focused on finding out what their market wants to buy.

I am not saying that these things are wrong what I am saying is that I think they're outdated.

I want to challenge these things and see if maybe some of these ideas about business and marketing are actually holding you back and also to see if you will have a paradigm shift or a perspective change.

EXTERNAL PERSPECTIVE IN BUSINESS

What about fitting in instead of standing out to get attention? Have you ever been to a seminar or somewhere else minding your own business and then spotting someone you knew. They stood out among dozens if not hundreds of people. They stood out because they already had a place in your life. They already fit in. I believe that fitting in is going to take care of the standing out. If you fit in, you won't have to stand up to get attention because you already have it.

stood out because they already had a place in your life. They already fit in. I believe that fitting in is going to take care of the standing out. If you fit in, you won't have to stand up to get attention because you already have it.

When we want to look at crafting messages to cut through the clutter we first have to define what clutter is. Most marketers will define clutter as all these other marketing messages that are constantly coming in. If, however, you look at this from the markets perspective they probably couldn't care less about all the different marketing messages. They don't even consider them clutter because they are not paying attention to them. They have no relevance because they don't fit in.

You shouldn't be interested or focused on clearing clutter, your focus should be on your customers, clients and prospects. If they don't see these messages as clutter then what you want to do is be part of the clutter.

What about communicating? It is my opinion that starting conversations is the way to go. I believe that when we start engaging in conversations, whatever the message we want to communicate will be done effectively.

What about the USP, the unique selling proposition? I have a different term, one that I have defined. It's called CVP. This stands for conversation value proposition. This is the reason why people want to have a conversation with you.

When you have a clear conversation value proposition and you start having conversations and fitting in then whatever you consider your unique selling proposition to be will be very clearly articulated and perfectly clear.

What does our market want to buy? This question has not become obsolete and it still has its place. What needs to change, however, is the syntax of it. What needs to be changed is the where it is and where it goes.

EXTERNAL PERSPECTIVE IN BUSINESS

The question to ask yourself is, how does my market live their lives?

The main thing you need to do as a business is to be relevant. You can get people's attention but attention doesn't mean consumption.

There's a series of questions you need to ask yourself. If you ask these questions and you get the answers to these questions, then what can happen for you and your business is unbelievable. The level of success that you can get and the edge you will have over your competition can all be achieved when you have the answers to these questions.

The first question is: How do our customers live their lives?

I have a four digit number for you. This four digit number is where you are going to find your success. The number is 1,440. Every single one of us has 1,440 minutes and you want to know how your market spends these 1,440 minutes. You also need to know how you can fit into their lifestyle so that you own the maximum amount of these 1,440 minutes. If you get the answer to this question then your business will become unbelievable.

To summarize what it is all about, there is one word and that is perspective. If you have internal perspective it will be all about trying to get attention. It will be all about selling and seducing. If you flip the coin over and you have external perspective you will see that it is all about really fitting in, starting conversations, having participation and being relevant.

It really is up to you to decide whether you want internal perspective or external perspective. There is a lot of information in this report and a lot of it probably goes against everything you have been taught about business so you might want to read this report a number of times and digest everything before you make your mind up about it.
