Motivations And Success

This report focuses on your motivations and how they can affect your life, business, even your health.

Experiences are supposed to be the best teachers. In my experiences, it took getting shot to turn my life around. I'm not going into the details of how I ended up getting shot, but I will tell you how I ended up in that situation in the first place.

There were two killer motivations that led to that situation.

Killer Motivations

Killer motivations are things that drive you to take actions that go against your character or your values and what you really stand for.

Are you motivated to do things regardless of whether they go against your beliefs?

Are you motivated to do things just so that you will look good?

If you answered yes, this is killer motivation number one.

Are you motivated to do things so that you don't look bad?

If you answered yes, this is killer motivation number two.

As a human being, you look for acceptance from other people and in most cases, you probably thrive off the human interaction and acceptance of the people in your life. You enjoy having the respect of people that you look up to or value.

Sometimes though, this can drive you to do things that you don't really want to do.

You do them because you want to look good or you don't want to look bad. This becomes the driving force and ultimately you override what you really stand for.

When I look back on my life and my situation, I can see I was doing things because I wanted to look good to the people I surrounded myself with and not look bad in front of them.

Getting What You Deserve

It's easy to say you were in the wrong place at the wrong time and it's easy to say you were in the right place at the right time but the fact of the matter is, they are both products of the decisions you made.

Look at your life and see if you've been getting what you deserve based on your motivations. There may be a lot of negative experiences based on the motivations behind the decisions that led to these experiences.

New Motivations

Now, look at your life and imagine what you want. Then change your motivations.

There are so many different ways that you can be motivated. You need to narrow this down to two or three very distinct motivations that not only motivate you, but also create a filter.

You want this filter to show you that if it doesn't fit with your vision, then it isn't relevant or necessary and therefore doesn't require your attention.

If you're doing the same things and getting the same results then you need to do things differently. You need to have a different motivation and you need to do different things.

One new motivation, the vision for winning, can apply to your business, your family or even your health. Whatever your vision, get a really clear picture of what it should look like.

Ask yourself how your business or life is working for you. If you don't like the answer, it's time to change it. But first, own up to the fact that every place you've been and the place you're in now is the product of decisions you've made.

Realign Yourself

One of the main things you need to do is think differently. When you start to think differently about things you will start to feel differently about yourself and your world.

Ask yourself the questions, are you doing things to look good or doing things not to look bad and are they working for you?

Now, doing things to look good or doing things not to look bad isn't necessarily a bad thing...if what you're doing is in alignment with what you represent and what you stand for.

If it's not, then it's time to change that motivation and start thinking of a new motivation. Replace the two killer motivations with two new motivations that will allow you to be in the driver's seat every single day.

Whatever the motivations are, evaluate them everyday and recommit to them. Making just a one time commitment and expecting a different outcome won't happen.

Realign yourself every single day.

If the motivations that you have in your life right now are sabotaging you or they are deterring you from getting where you ultimately want to go, then identify and cut them off.

These killer motivations will ultimately create more stress because of the commitment you've made to the wrong motivations. The longer it continues, the longer you'll live a life that isn't the one you really envision. The decisions you make will continue to come from motivations that don't support your character or your own values.

If this sounds familiar to you then ask yourself this one question. What are you going to do about it?

My life changed for the better once I got in touch with the vision I wanted to create.

Find the one thing that will become a beacon for you. This is something that you can move towards. Then find and understand the motivations that will get you there.

My beacon was making a contribution.

I felt that if I was coming from a place where I would be able to make a certain amount of contributions to people and I had the right motivations behind me, I would experience the life that I wanted to live.

I knew that it wouldn't happen overnight but with the right motivations I knew it eventually would and it eventually did.

Success Motivators

The only way to make something eventually happen is through effort and making adjustments along the way. Commit to doing things differently and doing different things.

These are two base motivations for success...doing things differently and doing different things.

The place you start is with your own mind. You'll never change what's in your hand until you change what's in your head.

You need to take charge today. Look at your life and see how it's working for you. If it's not working, take a long look at your motivations and see what's been driving your decisions. It's time for some new motivations for success.
